

As a 65 year old man who helped start the Cable TV industry, I have watched the media evolve from one TV network to what it is today. Now I am watching the power of the media as they report the events of Iraq. It is scary to see the biased reporting, but gives us an excellent example of why we have to encourage, by law, diversity of the airwaves.

We already have gone too far, with CNN owned by Time-Warner, and Fox News owned by a network soon to own a satellite direct to the home. Obviously the economics will dictate additional concentration as these giants are the only ones able to afford to buy the programming that will attract subscribers.

You, our government, are the only control. They are the public's airwaves, not private companies. They are limited in number. Do not let them be gathered up by a select few. IT is a way to rule the world. It is dangerous.

Help keep our country great by not allowing the FCC to change the rules.

Sincerely,

Thomas Sonsini
